Tridico earns distinguished title of "First Airman"

By Master Sgt. Joseph Harwood
179th Airlift Wing

Airman First Class Sophie Tridico, a member of the Fire Protection Unit at the 179th Airlift Wing in Mansfield, stepped off the bus at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas on Sept. 22, 2020. Tridico arrived to Basic Military Training during the ongoing coronavirus pandemic, as one of over 700 masked trainees. By graduation, Nov. 12, 2020, she would end up standing out amongst all of them.

Tridico not only graduated with honors, but earned the distinguished title of the "First Airman" award recipient, given only to the top BMT honor graduate.

To be recognized as an honor graduate in BMT, trainees are evaluated in a number of areas; physical fitness, living area inspections, leadership points, and the end of course exam. Typically, 10 percent of BMT trainees graduate as honor graduates. So it was no small feat to graduate number one among this elite group.

Tridico credits much of her motivation and success to a strong family foundation and heavily competitive spirit. Tridico witnessed her family's work ethic at a young age. Her grandfather started a family business in 1975 and it has been family owned and operated since. Tridico watched her brother, Airman First Class Michael Tridico, maintenance technician at the 179th Maintenance Group, join first in 2018.

"My older brother is a part of the unit as well, and he was in that top 10% of honor graduates," said Tridico. "I had to work harder to beat that, of course."

She then went on to graduate at the top of her class at her technical training at the Louis F. Garland Department of Defense Fire Academy, located at Goodfellow AFB in San Angelo, Texas.

The fire academy is home to the Fire Protection Apprentice Course for the DOD and is host to roughly 17 advanced Fire Protection courses, including mobile training teams bringing courses to the field. The DOD Fire Academy provides training to all components of the DOD, including uniformed and civilian members of the Army, Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force, Coast Guard and other organizations. The DOD Fire Academy also trains international students to build partnership capacity in allied nations. Graduates of these courses can be found working on all seven continents of the globe and each military service.

Tridico said that there were not very many females in the fire academy, 14 in total throughout the academy while she was there and only one in her class, from the Navy.

"Although the instructors treated us fairly and made it clear that there are policies to protect us and include us as equals, it doesn't change the dynamics that we're vastly outnumbered," said Tridico. "Some male students even voiced their doubts in a females' abilities when instructors were not around."

This feeling only motivated her.

"Firefighting is a predominantly male career field in general, and there are always going to be some people who will question if you belong there with them," said Tridico. "You have to prove to everyone that you do. I would look at whatever the requirements are for what we're doing and tell myself that not only can I do that, I will do better than that, and I did!"

Another factor in Tridico's impressive BMT performance was the "Student Flight" program that prepares Ohio Air National Guard recruits for BMT while they wait for their training dates. The primary purpose is to educate recruits on what to expect. During the pandemic Student Flight courses were conducted online by Master Sgt. Nick Alexander, recruiting office flight chief.

"After spending drill weekends with us at the 179th Airlift Wing Student Flight, our recruits are a step ahead of some of the incoming active duty members, who might not have learned all of the ranks, chain of command structures, marching, cadence, customs and courtesies in advance to BMT," Alexander added. "We try to set them up for success here before we send them, but Airman Tridico took it to the next level on her own merits, we're very proud of her accomplishments and representation of what an Air Guard member can look like."

The 179th Airlift Wing Fire Department is also very proud of her accomplishments in training and confident in her capabilities. So much so that they are ready to give her some real world experience.

"We were having a barbeque over the weekend towards the end of my training and I got a call from our Fire Chief back at the 179th," Tridico said. "He told me I was selected to deploy with them for six months overseas this summer! I was really pumped to hear that!"

Chief Master Sgt. Wesley Blair, 179th Airlift Wing fire chief, said it is uncommon for an airman in the Air National Guard to deploy so quickly after technical training.

"I am confident she will do a great job," said Blair. "She is going to get some of the best on the job training available, while also getting experience on other aircraft that we are likely to never see here at the 179th."

Blair is new to the unit and said he has not yet worked closely with Tridico but is extremely impressed with her accomplishments. Blair had not heard of the "First Airman Award" before Tridico's return to the unit. Being how prestigious the award it is uncommon to have a unit member with the title.

"It's extremely impressive," said Blair. "I think she has a very bright future ahead of her."

Tridico has had no problem stepping up to any challenges so far, and says she will continue to give her best efforts wherever her career takes her.

"I'm excited for this deployment and the opportunity to train over there. I'm looking forward to training with the active duty counterparts and the host nation firefighters as well. I've always been highly motivated, with a competitive edge and it keeps me focused on my goals," said Tridico. "It's a mindset."

The Death of a Camel

By Bob Carter

With a rapid growing business, the B&O Railroad needed more locomotives. Ross Winans supplied the line with 109 of his Camel Back locomotives. These were, for their time, a powerful engine with an 0-8-0 wheel arrangement. This made all the weight of the engine rest on the eight driving wheels. These were powerful, but expensive to maintain engines with one major fault — the wheels were always driving straight ahead and were often notorious track jumpers when entering a curve.

The wheels would climb over the rails, and once derailed, could upset, often killing the engineer on one side of the boiler or the brakeman on the other. The fireman worked in a stooped position between the engine and tender. Riding next to, or nearly on top of the boiler must have been hell in hot weather.

The Winans engines were involved in an average of one derailment a week. A better design was built in the B&O shops and were the "Hayes or Davis" Camel Back design with six driving wheels and a front truck set of wheels to guide the engine around curves. This was a 0-6-4 setup which was much better.

The B&O officials wanted Ross Winans to build this style of engine, but he flatly refused. He laid off all of his men, closed his shop and never built another locomotive. Bull headed. Just plain bull headed.

In an annual stockholders report, the B&O Master of Machinery reported, "To ride and eight-wheeled Camel at a rate of 12 to 15 miles per hour, it will almost pitch you off with its straight forward tendency and stiff connection to all wheels. It will not follow a curve like a 10-wheel engine with her truck and center pin."

"The ten-wheel engine, with its vibrating truck in front, will run the same curve with perfect ease. To take one of these Winans Camel engines out of the shop in perfect order, they cannot run three or four trips without their side rods and main box thump sufficiently enough to tear the whole side off the engine before they run 200 miles. The ten-wheel engines will run from eight to ten months before the least bit of a thump can be heard.

The Winans Camels did not last long after the Civil War. The ten-wheel Camels were still used on the line into the turn of the century. One was once stationed in Lexington to help push heavy trains up the grade to Alta.

In 1956, Lexington benefactor Harry Smith mentioned watching one of them at the station. The Camels gradually phased out with the arrival of the more heavier and modern locomotives.

END OF THE LINE — Camel 143, built in 1863, with wheels and side rods missing, is being cut up for scrap in 1893. It's boiler blew up in 1872, killing the engineer and firemen.

A TEN-WHEEL DAVIS CAMEL BACK #241 was built by the B&O in 1872. The picture was taken in 1886 at Willard Yards.

Plant sale is June 15

Richland Soil and Water Conservation District (Richland SWCD) is encouraging residents to go native when planning a garden or landscape. Going native means utilizing native plants because of their many benefits.

Native plants are more suited to our climate and soil and typically do better in our gardens than non-native species. They also provide excellent habitats and food for insects, pollinators, and wildlife. Because they have a strong root system, more soil is held in place which slows stormwater runoff, helps prevent soil erosion and filters pollutants before they enter rivers, lakes and streams.

Richland SWCD is hosting a Native Plant Sale in conjunction with Natives in Harmony on Tuesday, June 15, from 4-6 pm in the front parking lot of the Richland County Longview Center, 1495 W. Longview Ave., Mansfield. Plants cost $3 per plug, $6 per quart and $10 for gallon sizes. Species are available on a first-come, first-serve basis. Garden gloves will be available to purchase at $5 per pair. For more information visit <https://richlandswcd.net/services/water/rain-gardens>, e-mail Theresa@richlandswcd.net or call 419-747-8685.

Little Buckeye Children’s Museum nationally recognized for community impact

Little Buckeye Children’s Museum, a local play-based family destination, was nationally recognized last week in the JRA article, “Five Small Museums Generating Big Impact for Their Communities.”

JRA, a prominent design firm, is a proud sponsor of the Association of Children’s Museums Small Museums Financial Aid program, which rewarded complimentary Interactivity conference registrations to the leaders of Little Buckeye Children’s Museum in 2020.

“These scholarships allow smaller institutions from around the world to attend ACM’s annual Interactivity Conference, where they can interact with their peers, learn best practices, and become inspired with fresh new ideas that they can use to better serve their communities,” said Shawn McCoy, JRA Vice President and ACM Education Committee Member.

Little Buckeye Children’s Museum was listed #2 in JRA’s “Five Small Museums Generating Big Impact for Their Communities” and was applauded for how it “continued to serve its community, offering informative blogs on combatting isolation and resources on easy and educational activities parents can do at home” during its 2020 closure.

“We are honored to be recognized by JRA. Community impact is a strong value of Little Buckeye Children’s Museum, so it is nice to be recognized by such an esteemed organization for our work,” said Little Buckeye Children’s Museum Executive Director, Fred Boll.

Little Buckeye Children’s Museum reopened for the first time since its March 2020 closure on Wednesday, June 9.

New art classes promote wellness at academy

Richland Academy of the Arts is introducing several new visual arts classes this summer in an effort to make mental health and wellness opportunities available to more people in Richland and surrounding communities.

The Academy has recently brought on Jacy Warrick, certified Art Therapist and visual communications instructor, to teach several new summer programs.

"We find great value in offering community classes and programs that promote our Arts and Health Initiative, including our current Senior 60+ program sponsored by the Area Agency on Aging and Dr. Harold and Clara Ballitch Advanced Eye Care and Surgery Center" says Marianne Cooper, Executive Director at Richland Academy of the Arts. "Our partnerships with community organizations like theirs and with the Richland County Health Department have proven to be an asset to our community. I believe these new art classes will benefit many."

New arts and health classes offered by Jacy Warrick this Summer at Richland Academy include:

•Creativity and Connection Family Class (ages 3+), Saturdays, 10 am to 12 pm.

This class is meant to open lines of communication between families using art. Each week will offer a different project to encourage communication.

•Teen Self-Esteem Workshop (ages 11-17), Wednesdays 5-6 and 6-7 pm. This class will offer an opportunity for teens to express themselves through art, where students will create a unique self-portrait from start to finish.

•Exploring Wellness Using Art (ages 18+), Tuesdays 4:30-6:30 pm. Students enrolled in this class will be using art to explore the 8 Dimensions of Wellness, where each week focuses on a different topic to explore each individual's understanding of wellness.

Jacy Warrick earned a Bachelor of Arts in Visual Communications at the Savannah College of Art and Design. She pursued a Masters in Counseling and Art Therapy from Ursuline College in 2019.
